[Application of MALDI-TOF mass spectrometry to the identification and typing of lactic acid bacteria]. Lactic acid bacteria (LAB) are recognized as 'generally regarded as safe' (GRAS) species which have been applied for food fermentation, but not all microorganisms recovered from food sources are indeed LAB. It is difficult to identify a LAB species using biochemical tests. To identify LAB, MALDI-TOF mass spectrometry (MS), which is a simple, rapid, and reproducible method, was reported to be superior to conventional biochemical tests. We examined whether this method would be applicable to lactic acid bacteria identification and typing. LAB species were identified and typed using EZbiotyper Ver.3.1 software in eight major food products, which were processed with starter cultures. The data obtained from the MALDI-TOF MS were analyzed, and the discrimination and identification rates were 89.8% and 89.5%, respectively. The MALDI-TOF MS result was corresponded well with that of the 16S rRNA gene sequencing (100% discrimination and 95.5% identification). MALDI-TOF MS analysis was successfully applied to the identification and typing of LAB.Q: Is there a method of saving data in a row (with three column) in a database at the same time (as a row) I have two tables, tbl_request and tbl_request_selected. tbl_request has the usual fields, such as user id, request id etc. tbl_request_selected adds selected requests to each user. I am stuck at a critical problem. As you know, a row in a table consists of three column, they are id, data and user id.
